Good morning. Thanks for joining us today.

00:15

I'm marketized and I'm Chloe Herbert Valentine. Here are some of the stories we're following for you this morning from the On The Record newsroom. Toronto City staff have released some recommendations to help improve access to affordable homes. A report released Tuesday called for a multibillion dollar plan to add 65,000 rent controlled homes in Toronto by the year 2030. The report includes 22 suggestions to make housing more affordable and what they're calling a generational transformation of Toronto's housing system. One being reintroducing rent control for housing units occupied after November 2018. City staff say the plant is estimated to cost between 228 point 6,000,000,031 point 5 billion artificial intelligence technology is becoming more accessible than ever. So how does generative AI impact learning? Toronto metropolitan students spoke on a panel yesterday to share their thoughts on the future of AI in schools. I went out and filed this report. The Center for Excellence in learning and teaching hosted a panel yesterday to discuss the uses of generative AI in education.

There's already news articles specifically in the sports industry that are written entirely by AI. And that might seem like oh, well, it's just like recapping a sports game. But I feel like that sets a precedent for the kind of information that's out there, especially online.

01:43

The panel had five students from different programs sharing their concerns with the growth of this technology, and how AI can impact their learning.

01:52

So the only difference with CHARGE EBT is that now it's like a Google search away and getting someone else to do your work. So I think there definitely needs to be an education on acceptable ways to use GPT. But I also think that if you give an inch students will take several miles of paragraphs from Chachi. So trust but verify.

02:12

We've haven't deserved to be taught by like real people who have experience like the areas that we're learning. And so if a professor were using AI for like, lessons and stuff like that I would feel a bit cheated while being in computer science. The way I use it is like sad the free model free version of chatter et and the way I use it is to just like further ignited my curiosity when you're curious that you're willing to learn on your own instead of relying on other tools like ai TMU's Lincoln Alexander School of Law has condemned a since deleted open letter written by a group of law students criticizing the school's neutral position on the ongoing ISRAEL PALESTINE conflict. The letter dated last Friday was signed by over 70 people. It called for a ceasefire and expressed support for all forms of Palestinian resistance. The Law School issued a response on Monday saying they do not endorse the letter and unequivocally condemns the sentiments of anti semitism and intolerance expressed in this message.

02:30

up and coming artists Elisa Likht, Paola is renting out the urban innovation studio space every Thursday, her project turning waste into art. On The Record reporter Tarek de Haan has more.

Artist Alisa Alec Paola partners with TMU's urban farms turning waste into art. Alyssa works with debt cornstalks and milkweed. prolonging their cycle of life. Her crops will soon be on exhibits at the urban farm working with plastics like polyester deviates from ordinary textile design. I like Bella says she takes inspiration from her ancestors.

We in the Philippines work a lot with those kind of ephemeral like plant materials. There is a commonality between all these different cultures in that reciprocal and respectful way of relating to the land and to the earth. And you know, we we've obviously kind of like moved far away from that in our her philosophy, all things deteriorate and return to the earth. Even single use plastics, or like Bala wasted no time to book the studio. Once opportunity arose. She aims to experiment with different techniques and to change the conversation on climate change one sextile at a time. Five new sports are being added to the Olympic Games. On the records Curtis Martin takes a look at the TMU's connection.

The International Olympic Committee announced last Thursday that they will be adding five new sports to the 2020 A Games in Los Angeles, including the return of baseball and softball. Left out this time around though is women's baseball Tmu women's hockey player Emily Baxter represented Team Canada in the World Cup qualifier and is looking for to be added in the future.

 06:00

I definitely think that with the growing popularity of women's baseball that one day there could be in the Olympics. They definitely have increased popularity a lot in North America and a lot it cross in Asia. So definitely one day and if it is hopefully I can be there. Yeah.

 06:22

Baxter helped the Women's National Team qualify for the World Cup this past summer in Thunder Bay, hitting a double in one of her four appearances for the national team during the qualification tournaments. Definitely a very surreal opportunity. I was definitely honored to be selected to represent my country. And I got to learn from a lot of great coaches and players beside me and it was just a great experience overall and I hope to be back in Thunder Bay next year.

06:53

TMU's bold athlete will look to bring home gold this summer as the World Championships hit Thunder Bay. For On The Record News, I'm Curtis Martin, one of Toronto's own winning gold in skateboarding at the PanAm games this week. Here's Mackenzie rubella with more.

I'm Mackenzie Ravello and this is your sports update. Canada's youngest female athlete won gold at the Pan America games. 13 year old Toronto skater Faye De Fazio ever won Park skateboarding gold this past weekend. The competition was held in Santiago, Chile, Ebert's best score was at 4.66 points. This is the first time the sport has ever debuted at the Pan Am Games ever being the first ever champion and park skateboarding? A Belleville hockey team is joining Ontario Sports Hall of Fame. The World Champions 1959 Belleville Macfarlanes will be inducted into the Ontario Sports Hall of Fame in Toronto. The Belleville Macfarlanes known as the max will be one of eight inductees this year. The other inductees include Toronto Maple Leafs, President Brendan Shanahan Olympian Perdita, Felicien, Carla Marilyn Boto, and hockey star Jana Halford. The max represented Canada at the World Championships in Prague, where they face Russia, the US, Czechoslovakia, Sweden and Finland. Former Macfarlanes player red Bernsen will accept the Word on behalf of the team NHL to review players violation on Pride tape ban. Arizona coyotes defenseman Travis Dermott became the first NHL player to defy the ban. Dermot is under review, but many suspect other players will follow suit. The NHL banned pride tape after players sparked controversy for refusing to wear pride themed jerseys. It is possible Dermot and the Arizona Coyotes will be fined for this violation. Now you're up to date. That is it for sports this week. I'm Mackenzie bello

09:04

Taylor Swift may not be a hot single anymore, but her songs certainly still are. Here's Tori Goodwin with more in entertainment.

09:12

I'm Tori Goodwin, and here's your update on what's going on in the world of entertainment this week. Last Friday, Cher released her first Christmas album share tease the album on her Instagram with this image. This is the singer's 27th album and her career and features her take on some classic Christmas hits, as well as some originals. Cher also has quite a lineup of collaborators sang on the album with her including Michael Boulais and Stevie Wonder. More and music Taylor Swift has gotten her 10th number one single on Billboard's Hot 100 list. Swift song Cruel Summer rose on the charts after she released new mixes of the song last week. Swift shared the new cover for the song on her Instagram which you see here. Fans were left disappointed last weekend after Lily Audis concert in Vancouver was canceled. This image is the flyer Lil Yachty share heard on his Instagram to promote the tour. The performance was cut short when the floor section of the arena was flooded with attendees. This came after the artist encouraged the audience to leave their seats and move to the floor putting the area at overcapacity. That's it for entertainment this week. I'm Tori Goodwin.

Starting this weekend, the GTA will see temperatures drop in the lead up to Halloween. Here's Maria Robinson with your forecast.

Good morning Tmu. I'm Maria Robinson, and welcome to On The Record weather. Let's take a look at what you can expect today. You've got a great start to your weekend. Today we'll see a mix of sun and clouds with the chance of rain getting up to 19 degrees in Toronto. And that's basically the same across the board. St Catharines, Kitchener, Peterborough and Guelph are also all sitting at highs of 19. Then we've got Hamilton, Mississauga, Brampton, Newmarket and buried at highs of 20, with Oshawa being the coolest with its high of 18. Now let's look ahead to Toronto's five day forecast. We're cooling off a bit tomorrow with the high of 13 and a low of six. But thankfully, it's set to be a sunny fall day. So soak that in before the rain comes in on Sunday. By Sunday, we've got a low of six with a high of nine, setting off a trend of cooler temperatures for next week. We'll reach up to 10 degrees on Monday with a low of one. But thankfully that rain will ease up a little bit leading into our Halloween for all those trick or treaters out there. You thankfully have a nice sunny day with a bit of cloud for your celebrations. We'll see a high of six and a low of negative one. So keep that in mind for your Halloween plans. And Wednesday is sort of an unexpected mix. We've got a highest six and a low of one with a mix of sun and clouds. But with that cooler weather coming in, there's a chance of wet flurries. I'm Maria Robinson with your On The Record weather. Back to you in the studio.
